Riskex Ltd welcomed Iain Stewart, the Member of Parliament for Milton Keynes South, to discuss how their Covid Monitoring and Tracing System, Safe2Day, is having a positive impact on client’s ability to manage coronavirus transmission in the workplace.

The Milton Keynes-based health and safety technology firm has serviced organisations across private, public, and not-for-profit sectors for over 20 years, helping them to manage enterprise level health and safety risk.

Many of Riskex’s clients provide frontline and essential services, and at the start of the pandemic, they needed a solution to allow them to monitor the health status of their employee and contractor base, as part of their duty of care obligations in managing the risk of coronavirus transmission in the workplace.

The solution has now expanded to address client demand across all sectors and additionally, can now be used to support businesses with their contact tracing requirements.

Commenting on the MP’s visit, Riskex Founder and CEO, Mark Delo said:

“This was a welcome opportunity for us to highlight the changing risk landscape when it comes to managing employee safety during the pandemic, as well as discuss the impact Safe2Day is having on an organisation’s ability to manage effective Covid health surveillance amongst their workforce, both in the workplace and when working from home”

Press Release

At the end of his visit, Iain Stewart MP said “It was very interesting to learn how this local company is making a difference to businesses during the pandemic. I can see how this Covid Monitoring tool can provide confidence to employees returning to the workplace”
